

Career Opportunity in Sunny Southern California

$84,434-$137,265

Are there other career opportunities in court reporting? Are you an instructor in a court reporting school, manager of a court reporting or deposition firm, or a court reporter who seeks a less stressful, less physically taxing position?

The United States District Court for the Central District of California seeks a highly skilled, take-charge individual who understands the court reporting profession and who, with an assistant, will develop and administer court reporting services for federal district and magistrate judges. Based in downtown Los Angeles, you will be a member of the senior management staff and will develop, organize, and help set policy for court reporting services in the nation's largest federal trial court, in compliance with federal judiciary standards. Your success in this position could lead to subsequent management promotion.

This is an opportunity to work directly with more than 44 official and contract reporters, 57 judicial officers, and high level managers in the nation's largest federal trial court, with divisional offices in Orange and Riverside counties. The preferred candidate will be an individual with court or deposition reporting, or firm management experience, or considerable familiarity with the profession and court procedures. You must be organized, and have exceptional interpersonal skills and the ability or experience to manage complex and critically important services provided by predominantly real-time reporters.

Consider a change! Send your letter of application and resume to:

United States District Court
Central District of California
Human Resources Department
312 North Spring Street, room 535
Los Angeles, California 90012

The United States District Court is an Equal Employment Opportunity Employer.